SHORT BIOGRAPHY

Brenda Spotton Visano is a distinguished University Professor in Economics and Public Policy. Her widely published interdisciplinary scholarship advances a heterodox perspective on macroeconomics and microfinance. Her passion for promoting access and diversity in theories, practices and the professions of economics and finance lies at the core of all her scholarly and professional engagements. She is the recipient of national, provincial and university level awards recognizing her contributions to research, teaching and university service, including the Canadian Association of University Teachers Award for Dedicated Service, the Ontario Confederation of University Faculty Associations Status of Women Award of Distinction and its Award for Teaching Excellence.

Taking a “critical” or “progressive” approach to economic inquiry, her scholarship most broadly encompasses the interaction between economics, the economy, and institutions. She uses interdisciplinary materials from economics, sociology, business and political science to examine comparatively the history and evolution of instability in and access to financial institutions and markets. Access to higher education complements her economic research. Among her many publications is her co-authored book on Financial Vulnerability (with Jerry Buckland, under contract for 2021), a co-edited book, Payday Lending in Canada in a Global Context (with Jerry Buckland and Chris Robinson), her 2006 sole-authored book Financial Crises: Socio-economic Causes and Institutional Context examining the susceptibility of financial systems to periodic collapse, and her co-edited book Room to Grow: Celebrating Atkinson’s Living Legacy (with Kristin Taylor), a collection of reflections on the contributions of Atkinson College to advancing higher education for non-traditional students. In addition to publishing numerous scholarly articles in academic journals and books, she is the author of several reports for various government ministries and agencies in Canada, UNESCO, NGOs and indigenous organizations.

Dr. Spotton Visano has been an adviser to agencies of the Canadian Federal Government, the not-for-profit sector, labour organizations, First Nations organizations and other universities. She is a member of the national Financial Literacy Research Committee of the Financial Consumer Agency of Canada, the Progressive Economics Forum Steering Committee, and the community-based Black Creek Financial Action Network. She has served as President of the Canadian Women’s Association Network; a member of the provincial committee to develop a multi-employer Jointly Sponsored Pension Plan (JSPP) for the Ontario university sector; as Director of the ACCESS Community Capital Fund; Chair of the University Senate and Director of the Transition Year Program at York University. She was chair and chief spokesperson for a 7-union coalition of more than 4000 active members of the University Pension Plan and has been the union’s chief negotiator for 4 Collective Agreements between the York University Board of Governors and more than 1500 full-time faculty and librarians.

RESEARCH PROJECTS IN PROGRESS

CANADIAN CONSUMER FINANCIAL PRECARIOUSNESS & RESILIENCY

1) Financial Stress among Canadian Households: (with Matthew Brzozowski) – (1) econometric assessment of the relationships between life satisfaction, perceived financial stress and financial satisfaction; analysis of Statistics Canada - General Social Survey data; (2) comparison of factors affecting subjective financial stress and objective financial security. Actual and Anticipated Outputs: Scholarly Journal Article(s)

2) Student debt repayment and rehabilitation in Ontario: a community-based research project examining student debt complaints for assessing the sources of problems and identifying solutions: (1) financial education needs of student; (2) object-oriented solutions (delivery of information to community credit counsellors; students) and (3) policy recommendations. Actual and Anticipated Outputs: Education Materials for Students and Community Credit Counsellors; Policy Recommendations to Provincial and Federal governments; Community Partners: BCFAN, Credit Canada

3) Financial Inclusion. The overarching question driving this research is how to best ensure full financial inclusion with the availability of safe, sound, and affordable basic payments and non-mortgage credit services for Canadian consumers in an evolving financial landscape? Alternative short-term consumer credit includes instalment loans, title loans (loans secured by a lien on a car, e.g.), rent-to-own contracts (primarily for furniture), and pawnbroking, as well as payments services such as remittances and cheque-cashing. The imminent disruption from financial technological (fintech) innovations affecting consumer credit and payments practices promises further complication. Financial innovation creates new ways to unbundle traditional banking services, increasing the threat of further financial exclusion.

This project examines how these alternative products and services (in-store and on-line) compare to each other, to payday loans, and to mainstream banking options, thus extending our recent examination of the Canadian payday loan industry. This research is grounded in an institutional framework for understanding the organization and structure of financial intermediation. Theories of financial regulation highlight consumer financial protection as one of the primary goals of regulation. Legislation designed to meet this goal influences transactions costs, information costs, and participation costs. Legislation critically impacts consumer risk exposure and along with technological innovation shapes the resulting financial landscape defining the supply of Canadian consumer financial options. Actual and Anticipated Outputs: Books, Scholarly Journal Articles, Public Communications

4) Financial Literacy Experimenting with models for delivering financial literacy workshops to youth, especially marginalized youth. Actual and Anticipated Outputs: Scholarly Journal Article; Program Evaluation; Community Partners: various

5) Funding Models for First Nations Social Services and Education This project is multi-faceted and examines the advantages and disadvantages of various full cost funding models and formulas designed to deliver funding to First Nations communities for different social services and educational programs. Actual and Anticipated Outputs: Scholarly Journal Article; Program Evaluations; External Partners: First Nations Chiefs of Ontario; INDSight (under contract with Assembly of First Nations)
